RATIONALE

As the primary socialising institution, families are an essential focus of study in any program designed to prepare professionals working with children and families for the roles they play in today's society. An understanding of the role played by families in mediating between the individual and society, as well as the outcomes of this mediation process is central to working with young children. Families are considered as a site of both socialisation and resistance to prevailing hegemony. In coming to understand children, families, and child-rearing, early childhood professionals need a sound knowledge of the ways in which families act to promote and support prevailing societal expectations, as well as their function in leading and responding to societal change.

SYNOPSIS

This course introduces students to the changing nature of the form, structure and function of the family in contemporary society. While the emphasis will be on the Australian context, opportunities for cross-cultural comparisons and explorations will be provided. Particular attention is given to relevant issues related to aboriginality. The course will also examine the nature and effect of social policies as they impact on socialisation. The implications of gender, class and ethnicity dimensions on families will be addressed. Social institutions such as education, religion, economy and government will be examined insofar as they impinge on and reflect changes in the role and form of contemporary family structures. Particular attention will be paid to the impact of government and economic policies and directions on services for young children and their families.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

- demonstrate an understanding of the socialisation process, in particular the development of perceptions, attitudes and values.
- demonstrate familiarity with selected aspects of Australian society, in particular the family
- demonstrate understanding of the role of major societal institutions as they impact on the family
- clearly articulate the meaning of "diversity", and identify implications of this policy for the child care industry and schools
- demonstrate an ability to analyse the effects of social change
