SYNOPSIS

Public Relations* focuses on understanding and developing the relationship between an individual or more often, an organisation, and the "public" or "publics" with which that organisation must effectively co-exist. This course is designed to introduce students to Public Relations, the nature and history of the profession and the theoretical foundations of contemporary public relations practice. Within this framework, topics covered within the course include: definitions of public relations and other key terms and concepts; the identification of internal and external publics; descriptions of core public relations processes; and the tools of public relations. Finally, through the use of case study analysis, the student is introduced to programme design encompassing research, goals, objectives, strategies, tools and tactics and evaluation. * Public Relations remains a commonly used term, however, in many ways of business and government terms such as Corporate Communication and Public Affairs are perhaps more frequently used. We have elected to adhere to the more traditional term for the sake of simplicity and effective communication.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students should be able to:

- define and describe public relations;
- describe the foundations of public relations practice and its development to the present day;
- describe the core theories underpinning contemporary public relations practice;
- integrate those theories into the analysis of a public relations case study;
- identify and differentiate the internal and external publics associated with an organisation;

- identify the methods and approaches used most frequently by public relations practitioners in designing and planning public relations initiatives;
- develop an understanding of how to develop a simple public relations campaign proposal incorporating the core elements of research, goals, objectives, strategies, tools and tactics and evaluation.
