SYNOPSIS

In a world of rapid change and narrow specialization it is useful to develop a long term perspective on the course of human history on a world, rather than a regional or national, scale. This course examines the rise and fall of civilizations from the neolithic period to the age of Columbus, focussing on economic activity, technological development, social structure, cultural traits and, in particular, religious/philosophical systems. The course introduces the basic principles of historical methodology and is compatible with course ANT1000: World Archaeology which employs an anthropological approach. It also complements material in course AST1000: Australia Asia and the Pacific and course AST1001: Sacred & Secular: a prelude to Modern Asia. The course is particularly suited to Education students and is ideal as a general elective.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

- identify basic models of civilization and metahistory, including world-systems theory;
- recognize, define, and use the essential terminology of socio- historical analysis;
- discuss, briefly, the main events, places and people in the development of civilizations in the defined period;
- describe the broad parameters of the world's major religious/philosophical systems up to AD1500;
- demonstrate competency in writing skills, bibliography and documentation in the History discipline.
