RATIONALE

Globalisation and the rise of communication information technologies are having a marked impact on organisations and individuals who work within them. In this global networked environment, knowledge is a key source of competitive advantage that can improve individual and organisational effectiveness and efficiency and lead to innovation and creativity. Leveraging of knowledge, and creation of an infrastructure that facilitates and encourages individual development, group learning and corporate sharing is vitally important if organisations are to meet the common challenges in today's globalised environment. The development of knowledge networks and the learning organisation has given rise to the development of 'communities of practice'. A community of practice brings together key knowledge workers who form part of the knowledge network and have the potential to be an organisation's most versatile and dynamic knowledge resource. While 'communities of practice' already exist in many organisations, there is evidence to suggest that they require systemic and organisational support which is structured and managed in such a way to allow individuals and groups to act, research and develop alliances that can generate and apply knowledge. Community building and facilitation skills are needed to enable practitioners to develop sophisticated skills and knowledge to function effectively in 'communities of practice' within a learning organisation.

SYNOPSIS

This course aims to provide participants with an opportunity to explore how communities of practice can be used as a tool to facilitate knowledge management, organisational learning, workplace learning, and change management within their organisations. The course will employ an 'open space technology' which provides a strong model for learner-managed learning. Participants in the course will experience first-hand the development of a learning community as they create their own knowledge around organising themes and key capacities for the building and facilitation of the Communities of Practice.
