RATIONALE

An understanding of international relations, both historically and in the dynamically globalizing contemporary world, is crucial as societies and cultures, political systems and ideologies, and economies interact in dynamic and complex - and often confusing - ways at the different "levels" of the global system. Indeed, the actors in international relations range from individual persons to groups and institutions - with the latter including states and sub-state units, international organisations and movements, non-governmental organisations, multi-national corporations and regional organisations. Across disciplines, as well as across geopolitical borders and time periods, there are enduring coherent world views which shape perspectives about and analyses of global, regional, national and local environments; which portray expectations concerning the future; and which pronounce prescriptions for actions by actors with authority. These views frame long-extant debates on war and peace, poverty and plenty, survival and extinction; and it is essential that Australians understand them in their regional contexts.

SYNOPSIS

This course, which follows on from courses INR1000 and INR1001 ("International Relations in a Globalizing Era" and "Global Transitions and Human Security") offered in year one, is one of the required courses in the International Relations Major and the International Relations Option Studies program in the Bachelor of Arts program. First, the course very briefly reviews the historical dimensions and contending analytical perspectives on international relations, with an emphasis on processes of globalization. Secondly, it explores the foreign policy perspectives of key regional and global actors. And, third, it puts the fore-mentioned into an international relations framework with a particular focus on Australia and the Asia-Pacific region. It encourages students to apply such analytical perspectives through the exploration of a number of specific key issues that pertain to a variety of "communities" at various levels of the global system. Students are then assigned a more concrete contemporary "issue project" for analytical study and, where practicable, group interaction so as to achieve a fuller understanding about the relevance of such key issues to their lives and to Australian communities. Due attention is given to both the ramifications that such key issues have for Australia domestically as well as their linkage to the pressing concerns of humanity more broadly.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students demonstrate:

1. an analytical understanding of the nature and evolution of "International Relations" as a series of both issues and processes in and of themselves as well as an interdisciplinary field of academic study;
2. an understanding of the nature and evolution of the international system, the practice of diplomacy and other forms of interaction at the various levels of the system, and the major issues of relevance to Australia and its region;
3. Enhanced abilities to write clearly and analytically; and
4. an understanding of the currency and relevancy of the study of International Relations to their career interests and to the broader community within which they will function as informed citizens.
