RATIONALE

This course is seen as both the application of reading and planning completed in Applied Communication Theory and as conceptual and methodological preparation for thesis work in higher degree studies. During this course students will complete a project in an aspect of the application of communication theory to solving a professional, community, mass communication or cultural problem. The role of theory as a problem-solving tool will be monitored progressively in the form of periodic reports and lecturer-student consultation. Students are especially encouraged to link project processes where possible with various mass communication theories.

SYNOPSIS

This course provides advanced professional preparation for students in the planning of public relations campaigns. The course builds on theory and practice taught previously in 97944/PRL5020 and 97960/PRL5002. The course allows students to initiate an original campaign through the stages of research, planning, implementation and evaluation. Students are directed to develop a public relations campaign that demonstrates a concerted effort to build socially responsible relationships by achieving research based goals through the application of strategic planning and the measurement of outcomes.

OBJECTIVES

Objectives for this course are:

1. that students will become familiar with the strengths and weaknesses of key contemporary communication strategies in the context of their applicability to various industrial problems and needs;

2. that students will gain field experience in the design, application and evaluation of a project requiring the incorporation of public relations theory and techniques;
3. that students will have developed critical skills and a level of professional expertise in an organisational work environment that would be sufficient to justify their employment as public relations consultants.
