SYNOPSIS

The Studio Project constitutes a major commitment as it necessitates the production of a body of original work taken through to exhibition status. The mounting of the resulting exhibition in a thoroughly considered, appropriate and approved space is an assessable component of the course. To support the studio project students are required to write a dissertation that articulates their practice. This paper will detail the concept of the work in the context of personal development, supported by appropriate work-in-progress documentation, as well as its placement in a wider national and international context. Reference must be made to an historical and cultural perspective that indicates an understanding of contemporary art theory.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of the Studio Project exhibition and dissertation (part A) students should be able to demonstrate:

1. the increasing ability to produce and analyse a body of work in a selected studio;
2. a maturing ability to document in detail the stages in the process and development of the work supported by research and contextual analysis;
3. the mastering of skills necessary to curate an exhibition of a body of original work in an approved gallery space.
