RATIONALE

An understanding of international relations, both historically and in the contemporary world, is crucial as societies and cultures, political systems and ideologies, and economies interact in dynamic and complex - and often confusing - ways at the different "levels" of the global system. Indeed, the actors in international relations range from individual persons to groups and institutions - with the latter including states and sub-state units, international organizations and movements, non-governmental organizations, multi-national corporations and regional organizations. Across disciplines, as well as across geopolitical borders and time periods, there are enduring coherent world views which shape perspectives about and analyses of global, regional, national and local environments; which portray expectations concerning the future; and which pronounce prescriptions for action by actors with authority. These views frame long-extant debates on war and peace, poverty and plenty, survival and extinction, and it is essential that Australians understand them in their regional contexts.

SYNOPSIS

This course and its sequel course INR1000 ("International Relations in a Globalizing Era"), are required courses in the International Relations Major and the International Relations Option Studies program in the Bachelor of Arts. Whereas course INR1000 treats the evolution of the international system and the practice of diplomacy through a critical presentation of the major competing analytical perspectives and approaches, including "Realism", "World Systems", and "Neo-Liberalism/Pluraism", course INR1001 further develops students' knowledge and analytical skills by focusing on several issues in the realms of political economy, security, law and order, the media and information society, and the "problems of humanity". These issues are considered within an international relations framework, increasingly defined by "globalization", but with a particular emphasis on their currency to Australia and its Asian region.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students will demonstrate:

1. An analytical understanding of the nature and evolution of "International Relations" as series of processes in and of themselves as well as an interdisciplinary field of academic study; (All Assessment Items refer)
2. An understanding of the nature and evolution of the international system and the practice of diplomacy and other forms of interaction at the various levels of the system, including globalization and evolving state sovereignty; (All Assessment Items refer)
3. Enhanced abilities to communicate clearly, both in written and oral form, the results of the research and other work they have been assigned as well as a higher level of competence to work on analytical and problem-solving activities; (All Assessment Items refer)
4. An understanding of the currency and relevancy of the study of International Relations to their career interests and to the broader community within which they will function as informed citizens. (All Assessment Items refer)
