RATIONALE

Some sections of the Indigenous population have been described as 'the poorest, sickest, worst housed and most locked up' of Australia's population (Dobson 1995). The role of the rural and remote health professional in ameliorating this situation is to ensure that they are knowledgeable about and empathetic with an Indigenous perspective on issues that affect the health status of Indigenous people. This means that the health professional must interact with their Indigenous clients, individually and collectively, in a culturally safe manner.

SYNOPSIS

This course is designed to increase the students' understanding of their role as health professionals in relation to individual and collective Indigenous clients. It will examine aspects of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander culture and identity and critically evaluate factors, past and present, that impact on their health status. An examination of aspects of the politics of Indigenous health will be followed by a critical analysis of the concept of cultural safety and ways to implement this philosophy into their professional practice.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students will be able to:

1. critically evaluate commonly held myths about Australia's Indigenous people;
2. demonstrate knowledge and understanding of key aspects of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander identity, culture, society and health both from a history of 40,000 years and a contemporary perspective;

3. demonstrate a respect for and understanding of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's lifestyles and attitudes;
4. relate the effects of colonisation on Indigenous culture and health to the current situation in Australia;
5. identify the factors which impact on the health of other Indigenous populations and compare and contrast these with the health status of Australia's Indigenous peoples;
6. critically analyse the health status of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in comparison with mainstream Australia and the factors impacting on their health status;
7. critically evaluate the importance of land rights and the reconciliation process on the health of our Nation;
8. demonstrate an understanding and appreciation of Government health policies and implementation practices in relation to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people;
9. contribute to the enhancement of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' desire for access to, and participation in, health service delivery at all levels which does not deny their heritage;
10. demonstrate an understanding of the concept of cultural safety and examine its implications with regard to Indigenous social and emotional well-being;
11. develop strategies and techniques to ensure respectful and responsible cross-cultural communication in a professional setting;
12. demonstrate an understanding of and critically assess the role of the Guidelines on Ethical Matters in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Research; and
13. critically discuss strategies that will enhance access to, and participation in health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.
