RATIONALE

A study of the major theoreticians and practitioners of modern drama and theatre contributes to an understanding of current directions and discourse in the area.

SYNOPSIS

A study of the major theoreticians and practitioners of modern drama and theatre contributes to an understanding of current directions and discourse in the area. The relationship between theory and practice in modern theatre has been a dynamic one. Practice has given rise to a range of theories about the cultural and social significance of drama and theories about the nature of dramatic structure, performance and production. Theory has preceded or accompanied major changes in the presentation of dramatic forms and their cultural and social consequences. The exploration of this relationship leads to an understanding of how both theory and practice have contributed to an understanding and articulation of theatre in varying contexts.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students will have:

1. an advanced understanding of contemporary theatre and performance (All assessment items refer);
2. an appreciation of stylistic variations evident in contemporary performance practices (All assessment items refer);
3. an ability to apply theory to theatrical performance and to demonstrate understanding of a variety of performance theories (All assessment items refer);
4. an understanding of how theatre practice informs theory in modern theatre (Assessment items 1, 2 and 3 refer).
