REQUISITES

Pre-requisite: Any 1 course of History or International Relations

SYNOPSIS

Terrorism, the invasion of Iraq and Australian led intervention in East Timor have increased interest in warfare and strategic issues in a variety of rapidly evolving scenarios. The use of force in world politics and the history of modern war have become an integral part of our daily lives. To understand such issues, students need to develop an in depth perspective on the development of strategic studies in the contemporary world. This course, following earlier International Relations courses, will focus on key developments in strategic studies, including land, air and sea power, and the application of these to a range of theories and issues. Terrorism, Peacekeeping, weapons of mass destruction, and international law all play a part in the relationships that shape contemporary warfare. The course is particularly suited to International Relations and History students, and will cover theories from the 17th century to the present.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students should be able to:

1. recognise, define, and use the essential terminology of strategic studies;
2. discuss, briefly, the main events, places and people responsible for the development of theories of warfare;
3. describe the evolution of joint warfare, twentieth century theories of warfare, and contemporary issues of grand strategy;
4. assess the application of strategic studies to selected case studies;
5. demonstrate competency in analysis and writing skills in the International Relations discipline.
