RATIONALE

Dominant (Eurocentric) forms of knowledge and understanding have become equated with universal epistemologies. By comparison, Indigenous peoples worldwide have a knowledge base which is at odds with and excluded by such an epistemological structure. This dearth of recognition, interest and understanding needs to be addressed. An understanding of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Island knowledge systems will provide greater insights for both scientists, educators and researchers alike, equipping them with knowledge and skills to enhance their working relationships with and for Indigenous Australians. A course based on Australian Indigenous knowledge will enhance learning, skills development and the delivery of effective, culturally inclusive pedagogy and research for all Australians. Also, such a course would provide students with a greater capacity for managing and recording Indigenous knowledge, as students would gain greater appreciation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Island cultures. This course is part of a suite of Indigenous courses on offer at the University of Southern Queensland through the Kumbari/Ngurpai Lag centre. These courses are designed to form major or minor studies in Australian Indigenous Studies. Students undertaking research in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander contexts may find this course useful as an elective.

SYNOPSIS

A course on managing and recording Indigenous knowledge should provide a comprehensive understanding of traditional knowledge systems related to the environment, technology and science, language and communication, survival skills, artefacts and weapons, economics, kinship and social organisation. Essentially the course will present an overview of elements of traditional Indigenous knowledge, how it is used and how it has survived change and the processes we need to follow to manage it, and to record it. The course will endeavour to explain the importance of knowledge to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultures and societies to the learner. It will illustrate the need to record and manage the knowledge of different groups to document such knowledge. In this course, students should gain knowledge and understanding of: The structure and influence of knowledge, communication and language globally, and in Indigenous and non-indigenous societies, and how knowledge can be utilised and managed; The importance of oral history and traditions and their relationship to nature, the customs and behaviours of Australian Indigenous societies and cultures; Indigenous intellectual property rights and copyright, Government legislation and policy formulation in relation to Australia Indigenous societies and cultures; Cultural Heritage and Native Title Legislation - implications for Indigenous Australian peoples; Research ethics in Indigenous contexts.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students should be able to:

1. Discuss the elements and applications of knowledge globally, and among Indigenous peoples internationally;
