RATIONALE

As the effects of population pressure, unsustainable resource use and pollution increasingly influence global social and economic stability and quality of life, an understanding of the biophysical environment, social and political aspects, and current global issues is essential for future resource managers. This course aims to develop an understanding of the nature of the biophysical environment, the causes and symptoms of environmental degradation, corrective actions and sustainable alternatives.

SYNOPSIS

This course provides a general introduction and overview of the emergence of environmental issues at the global scale and covers such topics as the physical environment, biological diversity, and human impact on the natural environment. Issues examined from a global perspective include food and fibre resources, water resources, energy production and use, mining, fishing and forestry, atmospheric pollution, climate change, urbanisation and waste management. The principles for sustainable development are introduced and possible future management of resources and the environment are discussed.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students will be able to:

1. demonstrate an understanding of the factors contributing to global and national environmental problems(Assignment, Exam);
2. demonstrate an appreciation of the inter-relationships between ecological, social and economic aspects which make up modern environmental issues (Assignment, Exam);
3. demonstrate an understanding of the processes involved in human interactions with the environment (Exam);

4. integrate knowledge of the biophysical and social environment into the examination of historical and current environmental issues (Exam);
5. critically evaluate, as case studies, current local and global issues in environment and possible solutions (Assignment).
