RATIONALE

A fourth year Honours in Anthropology is the minimum professional requirement recognised within the discipline and amongst state and federal government bodies in order to be employed professionally. Thus it is considered essential that students are given greater exposure to anthropology as praxis.

SYNOPSIS

This course aims to expose students to anthropological practice in the real world. In this context it will examine the social contexts in which applied anthropology is carried out and how this influences professional practice, including a significant section on ethical issues. Case studies of anthropologists working in applied settings will be utilised so that students can gain a realistic feel for the varied settings and challenges of applied practice. Students will be able to choose a case study module most closely aligned to their thesis topic.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students will be able to:
