SYNOPSIS

This course introduces students to modern European history by examining some of the forces and trends that influenced the development of Europe between the Black Death (1348) to the turn of the twentieth century (1900). By focussing on significant turning-points and some of the colourful players in this historic age, students examine features of political, social and cultural change. In particular, the course allows students to engage with critical issues to do with Europe's hegemonic transformations and responses to the ideas emerging over the period with emphasis on primary source material. Content and assessment items in this course lead to an appreciation not only of the relevance of the rise of nation states, but also the nascent concerns and potential power of those termed 'the masses'.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students will be able to:

1. Identify the major events, forces and figures influencing political, social and cultural change in European history between 1348 and 1900;
2. Critically evaluate the significance of power, gender, class and/or racial paradigms as exemplified in specific European countries or regions throughout the period;
3. Participate in and contribute to group discussion in meaningful ways;
4. Analyse and interpret both primary and secondary sources within the context of providing a coherent argument;
5. Demonstrate competency in written expression and scholarly research relevant to the discipline of history on a selected topic.
