RATIONALE

As the effects of population pressure, unsustainable resource use and pollution increasingly influence global social and economic stability and quality of life, an understanding of environmental issues by graduates from all disciplines is essential. This course aims to develop informed and positive attitudes toward environmental issues, an understanding of the causes and symptoms of environmental degradation, and of corrective actions and the policies which support them.

SYNOPSIS

The course provides a general introduction and overview of the emergence of environmental issues at the global scale. An inter-disciplinary approach to the study of the environment is provided at a general level for students across all Faculties. The material is presented in a number of inter-related modules that cover the biophysical environment, politics, economy and society, and human impact on the natural environment. The course focuses on ecological principles for thinking about the environment, the links between society and environmental exploitation and the development of ecologically sustainable development. Consideration is given to population growth, the influence of technology, environmental economics and the role of community value systems. Issues examined from a global perspective include land utilisation, mining and fishing, energy production and use, water pollution, atmospheric pollution, urban systems and waste management. Special attention is given to ways in which environmental problems are dealt with under the ecologically sustainable development framework.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students will be able to:

1. demonstrate an understanding of the factors contributing to global and national environmental problems (Assignments 1 & 2; Exam);
2. demonstrate an appreciation of the inter-relationships between ecological, social and economic aspects which make up modern environmental issues (Assignment 2; Exam);

3. demonstrate a thorough understanding of the processes involved in human interactions with the environment (Assignment 2; Exam).
