RATIONALE

An understanding of the person and their learning needs underpins informed professional decision-making by educators and other human services professionals, whether they are interacting with children, adolescents or adults. Theories of development and learning, coupled with an understanding of the reciprocal influence of the contexts within which the person develops, offer insights into behaviour and progress, provide a range of frameworks for analysing learning and development processes, and enable appropriate professional decision making suited to varied circumstances and environments.

SYNOPSIS

This course provides an introduction to the key concepts and issues related to an understanding of human development and learning. Taking a lifespan perspective, the course provides an overview of the constancies and changes in physical, cognitive, and psychosocial dimensions of the individual, and introduces varied views on learning. The reciprocal influence of context, such as educational settings, family, peer group and community environments, will be explored. Students will be encouraged to reflect critically on theories of development and learning as applied to developmental practices across the lifespan and also the implications for themselves as lifelong learners. NOTE: Minimum enrolment numbers apply to this offering. Should enrolments not reach the minimum number required for on-campus study, student may be transferred to the EXT or WEB offering and advised of this change before semester commences.
