RATIONALE

Property ownership represents a significant component of the Australian economy, and the property industry employs a large proportion of the nation's workforce, directly or indirectly. Property ownership covers the public sector and the private sector, across many sectors including commercial, retail, industrial, residential, tourism, and government. The reasons and objectives for property ownership will vary widely and will influence the way in which property is acquired, funded, held and managed. Property ownership involves many other industries such as real estate agencies, property managers, construction and maintenance, legal practitioners, professional consultants, tenants, landlords, financial institutions, investors, stockbrokers, and an understanding of the potential role of these parties is critical to an understanding of property ownership.

SYNOPSIS

The course examines the following: (1) an introduction to the concept of property ownership and investment, (2) an overview of property as an asset, (3) alternative investment strategies that are available, (4) measures of property investment performance, (5) the use and application of Cost Benefit Analysis in property economics, (6) the use and application of various forms of cash flow analysis for the property market, (7) the use and application of discounted cash flow analysis for long term investment in property assets, (8) the various options and sources available for funding of property ownership, (9) financial structures suitable for property ownership, (10) valuation of property as an asset, (11) the effects of taxation on property ownership and investment, and (12) management of risk in property ownership. The course is structured to provide a broad overview of the financial and economic implications of property ownership and asset management, and is
