SYNOPSIS

In this course students analyse and develop a better understanding and appreciation of the complex nature and importance of organisational change and the related leadership challenges. The early focus is to investigate the forces that serve as drivers of organisational change, and students will be required to be able to distinguish between the various types of organisational change and different approaches to the management of change in organisations. This study highlights the role of the planned approach to organisational change, as manifested also in organisational development. The learning extends to the processes involved in managing and leading change, including the important task of carrying out diagnosis, and its contribution to the overall objective of achieving meaningful, timely and (often, though not necessarily) lasting change. Various types of organisational change and development interventions are explored and students are exposed to the challenges related to choosing, designing and implementing appropriate interventions. Students are challenged to consider the need for organisations to be transformed in the context of an increasingly turbulent environment. Finally, students are required to contemplate the future for leadership of organisational change.

OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students should be able to:

1. describe the context for organisational change and demonstrate an understanding of the complex demands that such changes impose on organisation leaders

2. differentiate between different models or approaches to planned change in organisations and debate the relative merits of each
3. describe and explain new forms of organising, and analyse the implications for facilitators of organisational change
4. explain and illustrate how Organisation Development as a planned process of organisational change may unfold and how it should be managed, using the tools available to change agents
5. classify the various interventions according to the two frameworks provided in the course and distinguish between the various broad categories
6. demonstrate an understanding of opposition to change, why it occurs and how it can be managed in effective ways, and analyse the challenges that such opposition creates for leaders of change programs
7. analyse the complex interactions that occur between organisation change programs and HRM responsibilities, and how the latter support programs of intended change
8. critically analyse and discuss the issues relating to measuring and evaluating change programs
9. articulate why human adjustment to change is problematic, and why resources must be diverted towards resolving such matters
10. describe, analyse and explain the systems approach to diagnosis, and apply the model to the three levels of organisational functioning
11. analyse and demonstrate an understanding of major trends and changes and the effects of these trends and changes on the organisational change function.
