RATIONALE

Project tendering and contracting is of fundamental importance to project management and is a key skill set required for the management of complex projects of a capital nature. Tendering and contracting are key elements of the overall project procurement strategy - the groundwork is laid on day 1 of a project and the implications are felt until the end of the useful life of the project, which may be 10 or 50 years later. Choices for tendering and contracting procedures reflect, and ultimately determine, the nature of the relationship between the key stakeholders. Criteria for selection of tendering and contracting strategies may be influenced by consideration of such issues as relationship building, time, cost, value, quality, risk, competition or transparency. There are numerous options from which to choose, and a prime responsibility of the project manager is to advise on the most appropriate strategy and to carry out the steps in an efficient, effective and ethical manner. It requires experience and knowledge in the areas of law, the industry context and industry practices. It involves a wide range of stakeholders including the sponsor, the project team, the major contactors and sub-contractors, suppliers and end-users who inherit the project outcomes that are defined and delivered as part of the tendering and contracting cycle.

SYNOPSIS

The course examines the following: (1) Definition of project requirements, definition of project deliverables to be provided through outsourcing, with consideration of risk management, quality management and operational and disposal issues over the operational life of the deliverables (2) Selection of an appropriate procurement strategy and contractual relationship for simple and complex projects (3) Definition of tendering and contracting processes and consideration of scope, time and cost management, and ethics, governance and probity (4) Identification and confirmation of prospective contractors and suppliers, and establishment of processes for submission of offers (5) Evaluation of offers using section criteria, selection of preferred contractor and supplier, negotiation of final offer and acceptance of offer (6) Creating contractual relationships including formation of appropriate contracts between client/sponsor and principal contractors, sub-contractors and suppliers (7) Agency and the law of torts, including fiduciary responsibilities, negligence and duty of care (8) Ensuring completion of contractual obligations by both parties including contract administration, duty of care, cost management, time management and consideration of intellectual property (9) Dispute resolution, breach of contract and termination and completion. (10) Project completion and handover of project outcomes to end-users The course does not require any prior study of project management, but students would benefit from having project management industry experience or by having completed studies in the area of project management beforehand.
