RATIONALE

This course introduces students to the scientific study of social behaviour, and to the process of empirical research and report writing as an essential skill for applied psychology.

SYNOPSIS

Social behaviour is introduced as the study of social processes at a number of levels from the individual level through to more broadly based social phenomena. Some of the major concepts and areas of social psychology are introduced (e.g., social research methods, socialisation, self-esteem, altruism, aggression, attitudes, communication, interpersonal relationships, family issues, prejudice, group processes, cultural considerations, leadership and social influence. This course has a strong research component and students will be required to write a research report in a style suitable for psychology as part of their assessment. Students will also require email and internet access to USQConnect for this course.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students will be able to:

1. identify major theories, concepts and facts from social psychology relating to social processes of behaviour which operate at the level of individuals, groups and society (Learning Activity Reports);
2. analyse and interpret social life by application of relevant theoretical concepts (Learning Activity Reports);

3. identify the effects of social influences on individuals in interpersonal, group, and other social settings (Learning Activity Reports);
4. apply scientific methods to selected areas covered in practical project (Practical Report);
