RATIONALE

Assessment of behaviour is central to research in the behavioural sciences and to the practice of psychology. Students could not pursue post-graduate studies, or enter professional practice, without knowledge of the principles underlying psychological assessment, as well as the major techniques of developing, evaluating, and using psychological measures.

SYNOPSIS

This course is divided into two parts. The first part concerns the principles of psychological testing, and topics include ethical practice in testing, theories relevant to psychological testing, test reliability and validity, norms, and how each of these aspects inform the evaluation and use of psychological tests. The second part concerns particular areas of testing such as intelligence, personality, vocational aptitude, and tests of specific functioning, including clinical and forensic, and how these are applied in various practice settings. Students can expect to learn about some of the major tests currently in use, as well as a representative array of tests typifying the above areas.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students should be able to:

1. demonstrate an understanding of the principles of psychological assessment, including major theories, statistical foundations, methods of test construction and analysis, and test bias (On-line quizzes);
2. demonstrate an understanding of the professional, ethical, and legal issues affecting psychological assessment in the practice setting (On-line quizzes; Case Report assignment);

3. locate and understand information to evaluate the reliability, validity, and construction methods, of psychological tests and related measures (On-line quizzes);
4. interpret the results of some common psychological tests and measures to a level of mastery approximating that of an entry level psychologist practitioner (Case Report assignment);
5. integrate assessment data and prepare an assessment report to a level of mastery approximating that of an entry level psychologist practitioner (Case Report assignment).
