

B – Academic Professional Development

The Academic Professional Development Project is designed to provide a comprehensive suit of open source professional development resources for the universities academic staff. These resources support staff from the time of induction through to, hopefully, the completion of a Graduate Certificate in Learning and Teaching. This project also has a strong emphasis on the professional development of sessional and international staff and is also linked to a new staff ePortfolio initiative. Aligned with this process is the co-ordinated provision of Tailored (or just in time) professional development, provided through a strategically aligned series of workshops and our visiting scholars program. You will also hear people around campus talking about a thing called Communities of Practice or CoPs. Cops are about people working together to co-construct knowledge, particularly relevant to their discipline and your workplace.
