Program focus

This program aims to provide two key paths of study: an enhanced understanding of the basic issues and principles in the community sector and the development of a theoretical framework for people interested in becoming professional counsellors. The program affords the opportunity to engage in specialised study including indigenous, psychology, and child and family minors.

Career opportunities

This is a foundation program for people who wish to work in community organisations, community development and in the counselling field as youth counsellors, welfare workers and support workers.

Professional accreditation

Counselling is currently an unregulated industry and there are no legal requirements for professional accreditation. Graduates who complete the Bachelor of Human Services (Counselling) may apply for membership with a professional counselling association, including the Australian Counselling Association.

Program aims

The aim of the program is to provide two key paths of study: an enhanced understanding of the basic issues and principles in the community sector and the development of a theoretical framework for people interested in becoming professional counsellors. - an understanding of community development and welfare based on social justice/human rights perspective from within Australia, and globally

- understanding of the key issues in working within the community sector

Elective courses

Students who are completing a minor study are required to enrol in elective courses equivalent to two units. Students commencing this program may wish to consider studying PSY3030 Abnormal Behaviour as an elective. This course provides an elaboration of the main concepts and issues regarding abnormal behaviours and mental illness. Students commencing this program may also wish to consider studying PSY1030 Cross-Cultural and Indigenous Psychology as an elective in the EXT mode in the semester 2 or Semester 3 offering. The aim of PSY1030 is to provide an increased understanding and awareness of cultural effects upon psychology which will hopefully lead to increased tolerance and respect for people of diverse cultures. Students may enrol in a minor and/or electives other than at USQ under collaborative cross-institutional arrangements, details of which must be negotiated with the Program Coordinator.
