

Overview of Australian Guide to Legal Citation (AGLC) 3rd Edition

The following table is intended as a quick guide to referencing commonly used legal information sources using the Australian Guide to Legal Citation (3rd ed, 2010) style. Refer to the AGLC publication for detailed information on referencing other types of information including: government publications, interviews, transcripts and international material.

A full copy of the AGLC is freely available for download only (<http://mulr.law.unimelb.edu.au/go/aglc>) or in print format in the USQ Library at shelf number 808.06634 Aus. The AGLC is published by the University of Melbourne Law Review Association and has been adopted by many Australian Law Journals and Australian Law Schools, including the USQ Law School, as a standard method of citation.

The AGLC referencing style incorporates the use of footnotes and a bibliography. This table provides examples of how to cite sources correctly in footnote format and in a bibliography. An overview of the key elements of both formats is provided below.

Information Type	Footnote	Bibliography
Format of key elements	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Use footnotes to provide information about sources used in your work. • Within the text of your work, footnote numbers are positioned after punctuation. • Footnotes appear at the end of each page of your work. • Use a full stop at the end of each footnote. • Separate multiple sources in a footnote with a semi-colon. • A Pinpoint is the particular page, paragraph or chapter number from which you have sourced information. • The first time a source is cited, it is cited in full. Thereafter, it is appropriate to use ibid or above n in certain circumstances. See AGLC section 1.4. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The bibliography is divided into sections as outlined in AGLC 1.16: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> A. Articles/Books/Reports B. Cases C. Legislation D. Treaties E. Other • Organise items alphabetically under each heading. • All sources are listed as outlined in the relevant AGLC rules with the following exceptions: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Invert the first author's first name and surname and separate these with a comma. ○ Pinpoint references are not included, however note that the starting page number for journal articles and cases is not a pinpoint & remains part of the citation. ○ There is no full stop at the end of a bibliography entry.
