RATIONALE
Microeconomics is a study of people in the `ordinary business of life`. As economic welfare depends upon the choices of people regarding the allocation and use of resources, it is necessary that ordinary members of the community, and specialists in government, education and business, understand the account of these choices that is provided by microeconomic theory and are able to develop critiques of that theory. It is also necessary that they are able to appreciate, and undertake, microeconomic analysis of contemporary problems and policies. This course explores the theory of economic choice and its application to a range of resource-use questions.

SYNOPSIS
Microeconomics is part of the study of how the world works. It deals with business, household and government choices, the design and effects of policy and the efficiency and fairness of the way resources are used in a community. This course focuses upon a range of microeconomic principles, their use by economists in economic analysis and their relevance in the global economy. While drawing on the history of economic thought, it emphasises contemporary resource-use issues and the development of the skills of the professional economist.
OBJECTIVES

On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

- identify and explain sources of microeconomic change in an economy;
- demonstrate an understanding of the nature and method of microeconomics and of a set of selected microeconomic principles and theories;
- apply microeconomic theory in the explanation of resource allocation patterns in an economy;
- examine the role of government in the promotion and/or regulation of industry and markets to improve resource allocation;
- undertake microeconomic analysis and develop strategic and policy advice;
- critically appraise microeconomic theory and policy.
