RATIONALE
This course is a supervised applied communication production project that provides students the opportunity to bring together the skills acquired during previous coursework studies. Students will be required to conceptualise, develop, and produce a communication campaign or project and detail relevant communication theories on which the project is based. By so doing, students gain the knowledge and/or ability to plan, organise, and understand the development phases of an applied communication brief and acquire the necessary analytical skills to critically appraise and document contemporary communication problems and opportunities and influence their solutions.

SYNOPSIS
This course is based on the student's participation in a major communication or public relations project and/or campaign. Students will be expected to apply the campaign development and management skills acquired in preceding courses to a particular communication's brief. Students are encouraged to explore the practical and experimental application of communication techniques and their theories to their project. The planning, documentation, production, and management of the project will be the major activities of the course. Students will be responsible for all aspects of the project development phases.

OBJECTIVES
On completion of this course students will be able to:
• Have developed their management skills to a significantly high level
