SYNOPSIS
This course is designed to introduce students to the main formative influences responsible for shaping the culture and society of early Asian peoples. The development of civilisations in Asia is approached from three different perspectives. Firstly, the elaboration of ways of organising life through time, starting with the earliest dwellers in Asia to the emergence of fully fledged urban societies. Secondly, the significance of geographical/environmental factors which have influenced, and are in turn influenced by the emergence of increasingly complex social groups in Asia; and thirdly, from a religious standpoint in which the contribution of ideas about the non-material world have shaped and fundamentally influenced the ways in which Asian societies developed. Running across these three approaches, and bringing them together, are a series of themes, such as social hierarchy, ritual, power and changing gender status.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

- describe the origins of religious ideas in Asia and their connection with the natural environment;
- recall the key concepts associated with the main religions in Asia;
- evaluate the extent of integration between religious ideas and the growth of civilisations;
- compare and contrast the origin and growth of civilisations in different geographical parts of Asia.
