RATIONALE
Families are diverse in form and structure and are continuously changing in response to dynamic social, cultural, technological, and economic conditions. This presents a perennial challenge to early childhood practitioners who are cognisant of the crucial roles played by families and significant others in the lives of children and vice versa. It is imperative that those involved in the care and education of children and young people make use of current thinking and new knowledge relevant to family and child studies in order to create programs that are responsive to these ever-changing contexts.

SYNOPSIS
This course examines families and children from an historical, cross-cultural, attitudinal and contemporary perspective. It is grounded in the social construction of concepts such as childhoods, gender, ethnicity, parenting, families and institutions. It affirms a variety of family forms and households, emphasises the diversity of family life and questions the value placed on children, by engaging with current demographic and sociological literature related to family and child studies. Students will examine and critically analyse the changing roles of families, children and communities, reflecting on the implications of these changes on the education and care of young children, whilst drawing on cross-cultural comparisons.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

1. engage with social constructions of childhoods, parenting, families, gender, ethnicity, children and institutions in Australia and other cross-cultural contexts.
2. analyse the role of families, children and communities in the care and education of young children in a range of contexts.
3. understand the cultural, attitudinal and contemporary issues and influences facing families and young children.
