RATIONAL
Professionals who work with children and adolescents must be highly competent in understanding processes of human development and learning as well as in recognising developmental changes. Such knowledge provides a base for the professional to respond to and provide optimum conditions for assisting development and learning. Developmental studies should reflect the existence of many cultures and societies living together on this continent. All teachers need to have an understanding and appreciation of the diversity of cultures within Australia and how they interact. A study of Australian Indigenous cultures and societies, because of their uniqueness and complexity, provides an avenue for the development and consolidation of an understanding and appreciation of all peoples, their cultures and societies. In contemporary Australia, it is important that educators develop a clear understanding of the nature of Australian society and its associated institutions, economic, strategic, political and demographic. The nature of Australian society and culture will be strongly influenced by the educational settings of today. A better understanding of who, what and where we are, can only provide the opportunity to develop valuable insights and thereby contribute to a more just and equitable society.

SYNOPSIS
This course is a study of human growth, development and learning in social and cultural contexts. There will be a strong emphasis on the physical, cognitive, social-emotional development and learning of children and adolescents. Students will have the opportunity to develop an understanding of themselves, in the context of contemporary Australia. They will be introduced to the influences around which identities are moulded, how these change and how they manifest in the Australian context. The course seeks to confront the stereotypes that have been constructed around Australia's indigenous populations, and to reconstruct those images on a basis of knowledge and understanding of, and empathy towards, those people who are the original inhabitants of this country.

OBJECTIVES

On completion of this course students will be able to:

- demonstrate knowledge of the major theories of development;
- demonstrate knowledge of learning theory and how learning affects development;
- demonstrate knowledge and understanding of aspects of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander identity, culture and society within a contemporary culture;
- show a respect for and understanding of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's lifestyles and attitudes;
- show awareness and appreciation of the sociocultural, political and economic position of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in contemporary society;
- articulate and justify a personal view of what constitutes 'australianity';
- engage in articulate and informed discussions of the nature and dimensions of identity; and
- identify those historic, economic, political, technological and cultural factors which have helped to shape contemporary Australia.

2 Students must retain a copy of each item submitted for assessment. This must be produced within five days if required by the Examiner. The student must retain this copy until the grade for this course has been finalised.

3 The examiner may grant an extension of the due date of an assignment in extenuating circumstances.
