RATIONALE
This course has been designed in response to a need for students working in education and training settings to have a sound understanding of the broader post-compulsory education and training context. Students also need to have a sound understanding of the forces that have shaped and seek to shape future developments in the education and training industry, and how they as educators and trainers can respond to the challenges ahead.

SYNOPSIS
This course introduces students to a range of factors that currently influence the design, delivery, and management of post-compulsory education and training. In particular this course focuses on the evolving National Training Agenda, its application and implications for vocational education and training. It also focuses on current trends within adult and community education programs. This course will require students to analyse their own instructional context in light of the factors and agendas identified within the course.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

1. identify the broad sectors of Australian post-compulsory education and training, each sector's target/client group and the usual type of mainstream programs that are taken up by each group;
2. demonstrate knowledge of the range of contexts in contemporary Australian post-compulsory education and training, especially in the areas of vocational education and training, and adult and community education;
3. demonstrate historical knowledge of the key developments and milestones in Australian post-compulsory education and training, especially the evolving National Training Agenda;

4. demonstrate knowledge of the current influences - political, economic and social - that seek to shape post-compulsory education and training;

5. analyse critically these contexts, histories and influences in light of the theory and perspectives presented in the course; and

6. apply this knowledge and these understandings and analysis to their own or related environments, workplaces and jobs.
