RATIONALE
Under current conditions an instructor has been classified as predominantly a teacher of one family of instruments. This has led to a situation where a number of instructors service up to 7 or 8 schools per week. Such an approach leads to a fragmentation of communication channels within and between instructors and schools, an uneconomic and ineffective use of instructor’s time owing to time lost during travel and setup, and a dispersion of the focus and service that each instructor can offer each school.

SYNOPSIS
It is the intention of this course to enable instructors to become more multi-skilled across instrument families resulting in a broader understanding of and competence in methods of teaching unfamiliar instruments which will enhance ensemble preparation, organisation and rehearsal. This approach will enable instructors to become more self-sufficient within schools leading to a greater integration of the instrumental music program. To this end students will be expected to demonstrate practical competencies in diagnosing performance concerns and in providing instructional assistance, based on this diagnosis in various instructional rehearsal and ensemble environments. NOTE: For the purpose of this course, ‘unfamiliar’ instruments are defined as instruments from instrument families other than the one which you would nominate, and have been employed to teach, as your ‘primary instrument field’.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course students will be able to:
• demonstrate increased competence in their teaching of at least one `unfamiliar' instrument. This competence will be demonstrated through the planning and implementation of a program of instruction in the "unfamiliar" instrument field;
• identify and analyse the similarities and differences in performance techniques which occur across instruments in different instrumental fields;
• identify and justify strategies which can be effectively used in instructing mixed groups of learners of instruments from different fields; and
• apply diagnostic techniques to all the instruments that are taught in the Instrumental Music Program.
