RATIONALE

Culture is a primary basis of identity. Individually, within groups, nationally and internationally, identity governs social interaction. Understanding how identity is assigned is a vital part of relating to culture and social organization. Consequently an understanding of culture and society is essential in an examination of cultural identity. When Edgar (1980, p.130) wrote of culture as the filter through which we see and understand our current reality, he revealed the impact of the past and its influences on the present. To understand contemporary Australian cultural identities, we must examine the historical influences that moulded current realities of particular groups and, specifically, of our two Indigenous cultural groups - Australian Aboriginals and the Torres Strait Islanders. Aboriginal cultural groups have occupied this land for at least 60,000 years and during this time have developed culturally diverse, rich and complex lifestyles. The Torres Strait Islanders are more recent inhabitants and were, historically, confined to the Torres Strait. Both Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders developed differing cultures within their own groups and areas. Such knowledge contributes to an appreciation of Australia's Indigenous groups' identity and their relationships with(in) multi-cultural Australia.

SYNOPSIS

The content of this course explores concepts of Indigenous identity at a variety of levels: individual or personal identity, group identity, international perceptions of identity from indigenous and non-indigenous perspectives, an historical view of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander societies and identities, ideas of contemporary Australian identity, and a view to the future. During this course of study, learners will be introduced to: Cultural, social and environmental factors affecting personal and group identity, Events and concepts affecting notions of Australian identity, Indigenous social and cultural identities and how these have been affected by historical events, The effects of media and literature on development of views of Indigenous Australian identities, Possible futures in Australian notions of identity and inclusiveness.
