RATIONALE
We live in an age of technology and for corporations to remain competitive it is essential that management is able to use information technology to support the attainment of corporate goals. Information systems provide a means of supporting the decision making requirements of organisations in a complex environment. Computer technology has developed beyond its original data processing function into a management support role, but this development also makes new demands on managers. The modern manager must be able to understand this technology, plan and develop it using an appropriate methodology, and then use it effectively.

SYNOPSIS
This course examines the trend in the use of computer systems away from data processing and towards information processing, particularly towards that type of decision support required to guide corporate strategy. The strategic implications of information systems are analysed, and students are guided through current developments in the planning, development, implementation, and maintenance of various types of information systems, especially decision support systems. Both hardware and software technologies are studied from the perspective of management in relation to the need of corporations to maintain a competitive edge in a complex and changing environment. Various development methodologies currently used in information systems are compared. The developments in the area of electronic commerce are also assessed. A number of current issues are discussed and extensive reading of both the text and current articles is required.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

1. Analyse the information needs of an organisation and evaluate how these relate to the decision making activities of key executives.
2. Evaluate information as a corporate resource and analyse the activities needed to plan, develop and manage an Information System.
3. Understand and analyse the technical foundations on which information systems are built, and analyse how new directions in technology will impact on the use of information systems by management.

4. Understand and evaluate the impact of systems implementation on the organisation in terms of planning, personnel control, security and contingency planning.

5. Analyse and critically evaluate the impact of information systems on other key management issues of this decade.
