In this clinical course students will develop advanced skills in interpersonal communication, developing a therapeutic nurse patient relationship, one to one counselling, and group leadership. Effective counsellors must have an understanding and awareness of themselves, therefore developing of self will be an important aspect of this course. Students will also be expected to gain an understanding of the cultural basis of interpersonal communication and an awareness of the need to be open to different styles of communication that can impact on inter-cultural interactions. There is a requirement of 80 hours of preceptored clinical in this course. There is a requirement to attend a one week residential in this course.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course students will be able to:

1. apply client-centred counselling strategies to clients from across the lifespan and describe the skills involved;
2. identify the importance of self understanding in the counselling relationship and develop a deeper self awareness and self understanding;
3. develop an understanding of the cultural basis of interpersonal communication and apply intercultural communication skills;
4. apply group theory to facilitate the therapeutic group process;
5. synthesise the above learning, the student's own personal philosophy, life experience and personality into an effective individual counselling style;
