REQUISITES
Pre-requisite: Students must be enrolled in the following Program: APNJ

SYNOPSIS
This course follows on from APN training level 1 and focuses on writing for readers. A "traditional" news round is then approached through the perspective of storytelling to build newspaper readership. The course connects APN7001 to APN's Readers First readership development program and takes participants through to submission of three examples of Best journalism. Emphasis is on the people at the centre of events and issues in local government, and on ways that storytelling techniques can assist journalists with taking boring information, to Best stories. Participants will be encouraged to reflect actively upon how their stories account for the lifestyles, interests, and profiles of readers of their newspaper.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course, students should be able to:

1. Identify the techniques and protocols of local government reporting.
2. Decide how information gathered in reporting local government is applied to writing for readers.
3. Reflect actively upon story value to readers of a particular newspaper and justify approaches taken to writing and story selection.
4. Present a complete portfolio of practice for assessment.
