RATIONALE
The Bachelor of Social Science is a degree designed specifically to provide the skills and graduate attributes required of an administrator or manager in the government or not-for-profit sector. As well as general management and administrative skills, there is a growing need for people skilled in community consultation, needs assessment, policy analysis and development, program development and evaluation. This requires understanding of society, consultative skills and critical appraisal. Other courses in the student's program of study engage knowledge and competencies from within a chosen discipline, and involve the student in learning experiences with members of this discipline. This introductory course offers students of the Social Sciences an overview of a range of social science theories and approaches to solving social problems. These approaches derive from sociology, anthropology, political science, social and community psychology, legal studies, indigenous studies and theories of multiculturalism. The course is an invaluable introduction to other courses studied in the core of the Bachelor of Social Sciences, and to the student's major study. It will assist students in selecting a major appropriate to their needs and interests.

SYNOPSIS
Students will be given the outline of a complex social problem and will then be introduced to a range of social science theories and problem-solving approaches. These problem-solving approaches will derive from disciplines such as anthropology, sociology, psychology, law, communications and indigenous studies. They will be theoretical rather than methodological approaches, as the latter will be covered in other courses in the Social Science core. Students will apply these theoretical approaches each week to the selected social problem. The major assignment involves an evaluation of the various theoretical approaches.

OBJECTIVES
On successful completion of this course students will be able to:
1. demonstrate a knowledge and understanding of the theories and practice of Social Science
2. demonstrate an understanding and critical appreciation of the theoretical approaches of a range of social science disciplines;
3. demonstrate a knowledge and understanding of the elements involved in planning and implementing a process for problem solving in a multidisciplinary social science context;
4. apply a range of disciplinary approaches to addressing selected social problems;
5. evaluate methodological issues and complexities involved in applying social science theories in a multidisciplinary context
